Advisor for Economics: Ved Sharma

The PPE major integrates the historical, methodological, theoretical, and practical foci of Philosophy, Political Science, and Economics to form a single course of study. The focus of the major is on the dynamic relationships between the economic, political, and legal systems of our society, relationships that require the analytical methods of all three disciplines to be understood fully. For example, the best way to understand our competitive market economy, certainly a fundamental institution of our society, is to explore its empirical, historical, political, and ethical dimensions. Indeed, if one considers the most influential historical figures in each of the three fields, e.g., John Locke, Adam Smith, David Hume, John Stuart Mill, G.W.F. Hegel, and Karl Marx, it is immediately clear that they recognized no rigid disciplinary boundaries between philosophy, political science, and economics, and that the strength of their views lies precisely in their grasp of the dynamic relationships between the systems that these disciplines study. Admittedly, the coherence of the major is expressed at a fairly abstract and analytical level; the content of the major can be broad and diverse, but all students who work through the major's curriculum will develop an appreciation of the complexity of our society's central institutions and problems at the same time that they acquire the analytical facility to engage and critically evaluate them.

Students in the major take a number of required core courses in Philosophy, Political Science, and Economics, followed by a concentration of courses, and a senior thesis, in one of the three participating departments. The structure of the major ensures that students have a solid grounding in each of the three disciplines, as well as a specific concentration in one area that draws on this interdisciplinary foundation.

Admission to Major is granted by the Director of the PPE Program. Minimum university admission requirements are:

- a minimum of 32 earned semester credit hours.
- a minimum cumulative GPA of 2.0 (C).

Contact the director of the program for application procedures.

PPE with Economics Concentration:

Students must take 5 courses from among any of the 300 or 400 level courses offered by the department

Note: All credits for the major come from existing courses in each of the three Departments. The core of the major consists of 3 courses in each department (27 credits). Majors must also complete 9 additional courses: 5 upper level courses from an approved list of courses in the department of concentration (15 credits), plus 2 upper level courses from the approved list of courses in each of the other two departments (12 credits). Finally, majors must take two Senior Thesis/Individual Study courses (total of 3 credits) to complete a thesis that serves as a culmination of the PPE curriculum. The total required number of credits then is 57, and 43 of them must be in upper-division courses. The PPE major, then, qualifies as a "broad major" that does not require a minor. The only difference between the BA degree and the BS degree is that former includes a foreign language requirement (8 credits).
